The Eugineer's Signal to his Wife. We clip from an exchange the following, in relation to a late railroad accident:

The engineer, Wm. D. Guild, lived in that past of Providence known as Elmwood, his house being close to the railroad crossing. And in that house were his wife and bairns. So every time he rushed by the loved spot, whether in night or day, in storm or sunshine, he sounded a short, peculiar signal upon the locomotive whistle, as a greeting to his wife. Think of a hoarse, shrieking locomotive whistle uttering notes of love. This signal meant he was there and "all locomotive whistle uttering notes of love.
This signal meant he was there and "all right," and we can easily imagine how eagerly she listened for the sound. To her it was sweeter music than over dropped in a golden stream from the pen of Chopin. In timethe people of Providence, and the regular passengers along the line, came to know the sound, and when they heard it would say, "That's Guild's signal to his wife." On last Sunday night she missed it for the first time, and will never hear it again.

Such an incident as this, supplemented

The Lendon papers have thrown out a suggestive hint in advance, by asking whether, perchance, a moong the Shah's collection. This diamond, it is said, was ence seen among the Persian regalia, and it is given out that a great many English people would be interested in having authentic information as to the present whereabouts of the ongraved brilliant, seeing that it was once the property of the unfortunate Charles I., who was accustomed to wear it as an ear ring.

A correspondent of the Cineinnati Gazette says: A very remarkable painting is now in Rome, which has been discovered to be one of the master pieces of the immortal artist, Raphael Sanzio da Urbino. Ten out of twelve of the members of the Academy of St. Luke, which is the highest authority in the judgment of paintings, have given unqualified certificates that this is a painting in the last and best style of Raphael. It is well known that it is impossible to purchase any of these, and that their value is almost inestimable. Circulates among all the white and fled river value is almost inestimable.

A BLONDE FOR A BRUNETTE. A Series of Strange Adventures— How Two Englishmen Exchanged Fictures and Wives—A Romantic Story, From the Bosten Globs.]

There is a little romance going the rounds about Richard Farquahr Dingle and his wife Phabe, and Robert Moore and his wife Phabe, and Robert Moore and his wife Mary. The account of the atrange fortune that happened these couples is so circumstantial that it must be in the main true. All the parties were English and ware nawly married.

Old Planes for Sale on Monthly Payments. were English, and were newly married were English, and were newly married as above in England before they came to the New World to court the goddess fortune. Dick Dingle and his wife were both blondes, and Bob Moore and his were browns, and both women were beauties of their respective types, and all were young and adventurous. The all were young and adventurous. The two couples didn't come over in the same ship, but they came about the same time, and they did not know each other. Dick Dingle, together with his pretty wife, proceeded to Petroleum Center, Pennaylvania, with a capital of $10,000, which was soon sunk in oil wells—all but $400. Dick divided this sum with Phobe, and started out alone for the Argentine Republic to retrieve his fortune and make another. He struck a tune and make snother. He struck a good streak of mining luck and cleared $9000 in the first two years, which he sent to Phobe, and which she duly received. This reconciled her to her huaband's absence for the time, but she heard no more from him for some years, and she began to regard him as dead. The fact is he was living a wild sort of life in South America, and had almost forgotten his blonde wife, though he carried her picture.
